PSYCHOLOGICAL HEALTH & SAFETY RESOURCE CENTRE

The COVID-19 pandemic has put a unique strain on employees' psychological health, and as we re-open, the strain and stress will linger. Psychological health and safety should be at the forefront of every workplace's recovery plan. WorkSafe Saskatchewan, in partnership with MyWorkplaceHealth, has created a resource centre to support leaders, employers and workers navigate psychological health and safety in the workplace.

<https://www.worksafesask.ca/resources/psych-health-safety-resource-centre>.

The resource centre includes downloadable guides, webinars, and workshops for everyone from employers to workers, as well as psychologically safe leadership resources to help you prevent psychological harm, promote psychological health of workers and address problems related to psychological health and safety. WorkSafe Saskatchewan has also compiled a list of contact information for community mental health resources in Saskatchewan so you can start get started today. The more psychological and social support workers have, the more involved, committed and satisfied they are.
